Love in Action

February is considered the month of love. We all "love" something. But love isn't just a feeling; love naturally brings about action. When you love something, you'll do something to show that love. This lesson will show students what love in action is.

Have each student get out a piece of paper and pencil. Now, ask your students what things they love. Have them write down at least 10 of those things on their paper. Ask the students to pick one or two of their favorites to read aloud to the class. You will get a huge list of things, anywhere from "I love my mom and dad" to "I love jelly beans."

Now, have each student review their list of loves. Ask them to circle the one thing they "love" that they can "do" something to show that love. What are some ideas the students some up with? For example, if a student says they love their dog, what can they do to show their love to their dog? Can they feed their dog? Can they play fetch with their dog? Their lists can be endless.
Give the students a day or two to complete their "love in action" item. The following school day, have the students share with the class what their action item was. This exercise will show love in action . . . and fill the buckets of you and your students!

For even more ideas, be sure to check out our past Bucket Lessons on our website!